

Warning Come To Pass

“In the course of time and things, to become potent engines by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men will be enabled to subvert the power of the people and to usurp for themselves the reins of government, destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion.” — George Washington

Truth is a version of the religious idea that we owe obedience to a higher power

So forth the elite tongues twist rhymes of lies, for they are not afraid of being cut off

The knife holds engravings burned into place from their own fingerprints

Scorning from the heat risen below

They are not afraid of their own hand

Nor are they afraid of our hands

Our foundational documents slurred and sundered

Their function lost to warped idealism

And the internal spread of its infectious pragmatistic dissonance

We look to salvation

We look to practicality

We split

Separate church and state

Let our values, atheistic or pious, force us to disaggregate

The noble dominion over the self has diverted to the virtueless domineering of variety

It is how we were raised

By wrinkled hands stained in red, white, and blue

Rotting of solvent strippers

The scent we are used to—our noses desensitized

And with our heads they twist to others' eyes

And while we stare, appraise, scrutinize

Duplicitous, fraudulent acts pass us by

George Washington warned:

“One method of assault may be to effect, in the forms of the Constitution, alterations which will impair the energy of the system, and thus to undermine what cannot be directly overthrown.”

And so we must understand and withhold

For what obedience is to being sacredly obligatory for all—so too is what the constitutional rule is to change in the hands of all, and for all, we are bound to uphold
